THE FIRST DAY'S OPERATIONS OF THE RIGHT

WING OF THE ARMY. VIENNA, July 16, 1861 .- The long expected order to move forward was telegraphed from Gen McDowell's headquarters, at Arlington Highls, to all the division and brigade commanders of the grand army, at 2 o'clock yesterday afternoon, and was communicated to the different corps during the brigade parades held in the course of the evening. The order was received by all the troops with the most suthusias ic demonstrations of satisfaction. The regimental commanders were instructed to held their commands reaty te move at 2 p. M .. provided with cooking rations for three days. Accordingly the greatest activity prevailed this moraing throughout the encampments, from the north-rumost post, near the Chain bridge, to the southernmost, near Alexandria. Tents were taken down and tied up, wagons loaded, arms put in order, ammuntion deal out, rations

At noon everything was in readiness, and precisely at two o'clock the 50,000 men comlosing the grand army about entering upon the great work of sweeping secession out of different positions toward their respective destinutions. In secondance with my instructions to follow the movements of the first division, under the command of Brigadier General Tyler, of the Connecticut brigade, I left Gen. McDawell's headquarters at Arlington bouse, at the bour of march, for Fall's Church, for the last three weeks the headquarters of Gen Tyler. With a spyglass, the roads leading to Fair-fax Court House could be seen covered with that the city is "for rent" cheap: retreating rebels. The column was about pushing on, when scouts came rushing in and reported a battery of several pieces less than a half mile alread. Col. Keyes immediately started an aid to Gen. Tyler, requesting him to send some rifled pieces to his assistance. About half an hour elapsed, when Capt. Ayres' battery of eight pieces came thundering along the road. Meantime other scouts came in and reported that the revels had precipitately abandoned the battery, and were retreating in hot heate with their pieces. So it turned out. But Col. Keyes, severtheless, ordered the skirmishers to posh slowly on, and Capt. Ayres' rifled pleces to throw some shells into the enemy's work. Three shalls were in a few minutes afterward lodged in the breastwork. But the enemy had disappeared, and the entrenchments were quickly entered and taken possession of by the skirmisters. The position was a very strong one, and could have been easily defended. A large quantity of shovels, picks, bags of oats, buckets, etc., were found in the work, and camp free were still burning in the rear of it. Half a mile further on, Germantown, a bamiet of half a dozen bouses, was reached, and found alone and deserted. The only white person left stated t at 2500 rebels, including Col. Cash's South Carolina regiment, had occupied the breastworks, and retreated only Nashville. about fifteen minutes before the federal skirmishers appeared in sight of the town.
